

S. G. FITZSIMONS IS LAID TO REST

Funeral Services at Charleston for Attorney and World War Aviator.

Charleston, July 27—(AP)—Funeral services for Samuel G. FitzSimons, Charleston attorney and World war aviator, who shot and killed himself on a highway near Hendersonville Monday, were conducted today at Magnolia cemetery here. The Rev. S. Cary Beckworth, rector of St. Philip's Episcopal church, officiated.

Mr. FitzSimons was 38 years old. He served with the Charleston Light Dragoons on the Mexican border and was among the first to go overseas when the United States entered the World war. He had several planes shot from under him and was cited for extreme bravery. On one occasion it is said that his plane was shot down but fell within the American lines and the first thing he said as he emerged alive, to the astonishment of the Americans, was "This is a long ways from Charleston, S. C."

On another occasion, on an aerial raid, his companion, Henry Stevens, was shot down and he went back over the enemy's lines to look for him. When he first went overseas, he was placed in training with the Royal Flying corps. He served overseas about 20 months, with the rank of first lieutenant, and was wounded several times.

Mr. FitzSimons attended the high school of Charleston and attended the United States Military academy at West Point one year.

He was unmarried. Surviving are, besides his father, three brothers, W. H. FitzSimons, Jr., of Greenville; J. C. FitzSimons of Flat Rock, and a sister, Mrs. Robert Preston of Charleston.
