

get to make the crop.

MAJ. BARKER DEAD AT HENDERSONVILLE

Distinguished Charleston Citizen Passes Away After Long and Useful Life.

Special to The State.

Charleston, June 1.—News of the death of Maj. T. G. Barker, at his summer residence near Hendersonville, N. C., yesterday caused general sorrow in Charleston. Maj. Barker was one of Charleston's foremost citizens, a man who in the stirring times following the War Between the Sections and during that great struggle acquitted himself gallantly. His funeral was held today at the Church of St. John in the Wilderness, Flat Rock, N. C. Mrs. Barker and many relatives survive. Maj. Barker died in his 85th year.

He had been in failing health for some time, due to his advanced age. Mrs. Barker, three nieces, Misses Rebecca Bryan, Fannie King and Margaret Campbell, and his nephew, Samuel FitzSimons, were at his bedside when the end came.

Maj. Barker leaves a long and honorable record of service, his reputation as a soldier, scholar and gentleman being known not only in Charleston, but throughout South Carolina. Especially is he remembered by the older citizens for the memorable service he rendered Charleston during the trying period of Reconstruction, being in command during the riot in September, 1876, when the negroes took possession of parts of Charleston. His bravery, coolness and judgment later averted a dire conflict. In 1869 he formed the Carolina Rifle club, the forerunner in this State of the others which acted as mounted volunteer police and afforded active protection for the white people.

In 1880 he was one of the delegates at large to the national Democratic convention the others being Gen. Wade Hampton, Gen. M. C. Butler and Gen. John Bratton. He was a nominee for congress in 1878, but withdrew after the campaign in favor of M. P. O'Connor.

Theodore Gaillard Barker was born in Charleston, August 24, 1832. His ancestors were Scotch-Irish on his mother's side, and on his father's side he descended from Pierre Gaillard, a French Protestant refugee, who fled from France upon the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, 1685. His father was a lawyer. Theodore G. Barker first attended school taught by Christopher Cotes and afterward he became a pupil of William J. Rivers, a scholar and man of letters. He entered the sophomore class at the South Carolina college when 15 years old. When 17 years of age, he was graduated in the class of 1849, with Judge Simonton, Gen. James Connor and Col. Thomas J. Glover, who were among his classmates. He studied law in the office of Judge Robert Munro and was admitted to the bar when he became of age.

When South Carolina seceded, Col. J. Johnson Pettigrew appointed him adjutant of the regiment of rifles. He served in this capacity until the Hampton Legion was formed under Col. Wade Hampton, Lieut. Col. Ben Johnson and Mr. J. Griffin. Mr. Barker became adjutant in this regiment. The command left Columbia in 1861 for Richmond and he continued with the regiment with the rank of major. Following the cessation of hostilities, he returned to South Carolina and resumed the practice of law with Judge Charles H. Simonton.

For several months past Maj. Barker had resided near Hendersonville.