

THE STATE: COLUMBIA, S. C., SATURDAY MORNING to live in reality, a vast consensus of few nations.

America is in the war to make a solidity, he who is material reward.

What she needs—and what her young men will offer the sacrifice of their lives to achieve the sacrifice of the military power which has brought so much of suffering upon the world.

That is the answer to those who bring their place for peace to the American people.

A Chance to Win Shoulder Straps.

America is facing its war preparations on the not unjustified assumption that forty-nine and forty-three one hundredths per cent. of the people's people stand bravely ready to do their part for the securing of the nation's safety and honor, on that point is based the selective draft system for raising the major part of the army. But the selective draft law is not meant to limit the opportunities or capabilities of any man whatsoever.

In some there can be no difference between the men of the National guard, called under the selective draft system, and those who enlist now in the National Guard or the regular army. But for the man who feels that with training he can qualify for service more difficult than that in the regular army of corporals, sergeants, lieutenants or captains—there is beyond question a better opportunity in the regular army or the National Guard now than there will be in the National Guard.

When that first increment of five hundred thousand young men is called to the colors in September there will be a vast demand for men who have trained themselves to command, whether it be squad, platoon or company.

Out of the National Guard and the regular army will go thousands of sergeants and corporals, to be officers, both commissioned and non-commissioned, of the new army. And their places must be filled from the ranks.

To many a brave and intelligent young man the opportunity is offered here. Not only will the man who enlist now be serving his country by making the most of his abilities in his unit, but he will be gaining for himself a chance to win chevrons or shoulder straps which may not come to him if he delays.

Solving the "Race Problem."

Last Wednesday afternoon another "race riot," the second within the week, broke out in New York city.
This time in Harlem. About fifty persons participated. Two policemen were injured and a number of residents were knocked down. Two negroes were arrested.

The occurrence of three race riots in Northern cities in three days points to the conclusion that in the part of the country where the whites outnumber the negroes about 99 to 1 the "problem" is to be solved with an exceeding swiftness.

One manifest factor in the "solution" seems to be the inevitable attack of the "niggers."

They never break a negro in New York. About 15,000 policemen are available to stop a lynching in a territory no greater than the average South Carolina county.

Mr. Theodore G. Barker.

In the State Democratic convention of 1914 that nominated General Hampton for governor Major Theodore G. Barker of Charleston arose and nominated himself for Congress.
There was no candidate from that overwhelmingly "Radical" district.
Men after men had been offered the nomination and man after man had declined to lead the reform hope.
That was when Major Barker, late adjutant of the Hampton Legion and adjutant of Wade Hampton, when that officer was in command of all the cavalry of Northern Virginia, placed his own name in nomination, saying that if another candidate would offer he would withdraw. He did not allow the "Hampton ticket" to be incomplete and, later, when the prospects of the election of a Democrat brightened, he withdrew in another's favor.

Major Barker died last Thursday in his 44th year at his summer home at Flat Rock, N. C. The Confederate armies had no better officer. There were few, if any, others whom General Hampton so truly loved and trusted. He would have attained to higher rank had he left the intimate service of his devoted commander with which he was content. He did not court preferment. He was of that kind willing to give all to their country when it called and unwilling to ask anything in return. In the Reconstruction period he organized the first Democratic "Hill club" in Charleston and was one of those upon whom the white people depended for protection. When the contest followed the election of 1874 he was one of the lawless men whose advice and direction were relied upon to bring it to a successful determination for the Democrats and it was his quality of calmness and inflexible courage as well as the possession of high professional accomplishments that made him so great a factor in the rescue of the commune.

Perhaps not a great number of the living generation of South Carolinians are familiar with Major Barker's name. In Charleston for many years when in his bold and vigorous old age he walked in Broad street young men pointed him out to strangers as their representative citizen.
They said that in his person were embodied the virtues in which they only had pride. There has been none to question the honorableness of his career as a lawyer. His life was without reproach. The heritage that he leaves to his people is the record of a life that withstood suffering from hard public service when it was required and that service was distinguished for valor and skill. He loved the quiet life of his family and kindred, he was fond of the abstrac-tion of the people from whom he spring, he closed his long life in honor, to be immortal wherever in South Carolina are left men to regret that his time given to the state the individual, became modest and sacrificing soldier and gentleman of whom he was one of the noblest examples.

Make Your Earning Power Help.

Large as are American resources in savings it is impossible not of them to finance the war. American earning power must be thrown into the struggle as well as American "billion power." In only one way can that be done. Liberty bonds bought "on time" from any of the banks which have patriotically offered to help furnish the answer.

If you have saved money, here is one of the very best places you can find to invest it—make fairly prodigious because tax free, and patriotic entry to the treasury. If you have not here is the place to begin.

There need be no fear of "hard times" in America. There will be work for all, and at good wages. Only the verdict of disaster will be told when the safety of the nation calls for the expenditure of every bit of energy to make the war a success.
By the insistence of the administration upon food control measures you are assured that you need not fear the burden of the cost of living will become intolerable. So it is possible for a man to buy a Liberty bond by installments. When the year of payment is up, not only will you have a rich and government bond investment of the type technically known as "gift-pledged" but in addition you will have begun a habit of saving which may bring you in large dividends in the future.

Put your earning power to work for the United States of America.
Buy a Liberty bond by installments.

What Other Papers Are Saying.

The Italian Advances.

Mason Telegraph.

Italy has wiped off many a score of indifference, puffing and indictiveness in the war checked up against her last ten years by the three weeks' offensive driving from the low ground captured during the Italian ward the covered Adriatic port of Trieste. Fighting in Italy did encourage difficulties through a country almost wholly for defense, the troops of Victor Emmanuel have steadily forced their way forward until they now find themselves throughout the course of the road to Trieste and within ten miles of that vital city.

The fall of Trieste is doubtless something of a set back, but the fighting of the last 24 days has definitely forced the last 24 days against the Austrian army divisions. Such have been assigned to defend their position. The rightly is. Just as the deadlock in the Western front has been broken by the tactics of offensive and of Arma by the established study of the attacking entente to take any given position, the Italian army has determined on sector at their own will and after their own preparation for the deadlock of the Italian-Austrian front has been broken with the establishment of the definite superiority of the Italians.

The immediate effect of the Italian successes on the main conduct of the war can not but be considerable although the Trieste disaster. Unquestionably will have to give troops and artillery from some other important front, probably the Russians, to an extent, and certainly from along the Italian front. Trieste is a prize line. Trieste, to be saved at all, there would stand the security at a price that might entail losses too serious to be long considered. To let Trieste fall would strike a blow at Toscani prestige on the Mediterranean and in southern and southeastern Europe that would never be offset.

Therefore the victories along the road to Trieste are of enormous importance. They add seriously and perhaps primarily to the down-bearing weight of reverses which are suffered by the Germans and Germanized foe. In the meantime men with their eyes for the German way on insisting that things are getting better there every day, that the work of reorganizing the country goes on apace and faster than they had expected.
Gains might be justified in expecting.
That the time will not be long before Russia's still mighty though perhaps too much shattered army will be rolling like the waves of the sea on the war-torn and depleted German lines.

These summer days to come fraught with great things in the active theater of war. Our own advances will be those shortly and doubtless after they have marched down the Strand and Champs Elysees to "smash the Peace" city or a hundred thousand of our incomparable National Guard units will be on the way to join them, and then division after division, corps after corps, army upon army, in a steady stream until this frantic struggle is won for democracy, right and justice. We do not cover our part, but it is not at all encouraging to note that against our coming great risks and strong hammer blows are being dealt the common foe.

SOUTH NOT DOING JUSTICE TO DAVIS

Birthday of President of the Confederacy Should Be Generally Observed in This Section.

To the Editor of The State.

I would not detract from the honor paid to the memory of Gen. Lee, the "Lionheart without reproach or fear," but let us continue to observe his birthday, holding him up as a worthy example for our youth. And let us remember that the South is not doing justice to its President Jefferson Davis, whose birthday, by the way, was a month earlier.

Mr. Davis rec'd as Secretary of war and as a soldier in Mexico show that he would have made a brilliant career a soldier in the South had called him into that service instead of in the service of the Union. In fact, it is a pity that our nation congress was such that one man could be so much of a hero and one of our ablest statesmen had be confined in that service.

Mr. Davis and Mr. Lincoln were the two great figures of the South and the North in the War between the States. In their positions the interests of the two sections of government in the nation. They both had to suffer much.

Mr. Davis was a thoroughly competent and able statesman, and possessing the most adequate of it.
